

James P. Evans, M.D., Ph.D. is Professor of Genetics and of Medicine at the University of North Carolina (UNC) in the Department of Medicine and the Divisions of General Medicine and Hematology, and Oncology. Dr. Evans also is the Director of the Cancer Genetics Services at UNC. Dr. Evans has served as a scientific advisor to the North Carolina Supreme Court, judicial institutes of foreign countries, and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, addressing issues of human genetics and its relationship to domestic and international law. Dr. Evans received his doctoral degree in pathology and oncology and his medical degree from the University of Kansas Medical Center Graduate School.