

Gurvaneet Randhawa, MD, MPH is trained in preventive medicine and molecular biology. He has trained at Johns Hopkins University, M.D. Anderson Cancer Center and the University of Pennsylvania. He is a past director of the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force program at the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ). He works with the EPC, DEcIDE and CERT programs at AHRQ and works closely with the CDC's EGAPP project. His primary interests are in the clinical applications of genetics and genomics, evidence-based decision-making and the use of models to aid evidence-based decision-making.